Three Take-Aways

- 1) Oil prices soften as Israel targets Hizbollah related finance institutions rather than energy infrastructure.
- 2) Risk sentiments improved as US equities stayed buoyant and USD softened alongside lower UST yields.
- 3) PBoC kick off on share related financing facilities last friday supported equities though the need to offset sluggish property markets require persistent efforts and patience.

MACRO THEME: Shifting Worries?

- Last Friday, Atlanta Fed President Bostic said that he was not in a rush to get to neutral rate which he has estimated to range from 3% to 3.5%. His key reasoning was to avoid a situation in which inflation stalls out.

- It appears that oil markets have shrugged off conflict risks with Brent Crude declining 2% to go below US$73/barrel as Israel chose to focus on Hizbollah related finance institutions rather than oil infrastructure. While damage to oil facilities are avoided for now, haven instincts may not have entirely faded with gold up 1% last Friday.

- In Europe, a spectrum of views remains. ECB's Villeroy said inflation could be at 2% early next year in stark contrast with ECB's official forecast of the target being reach in Q4 2025. Meanwhile, ECB's Holzmann had warned that wages decoupling from productivity could fuel inflation upside. The similarity though lies in their reminder that technical effects will drive a rebound in inflation in the coming months.

- In Asia, Indonesia President Prabowo Subianto took the helm on Sunday and quickly unveiled his cabinet with Finance Minister Mulyani Indrawati retaining her post as a signal of policy continuity and is a welcomed sight for the IDR. That said, with the largest cabinet in the past two decades, the sight of accommodating political fractions can be a double edged sword representing consolidating political stability or suffering unintended consequence of fiscal bloat and fragmented economic reforms. For now, with a third of post held by previous administration, the balance of risks may remain positive in the interim.

Yields (2Y: -2.4bps; 10Y: -0.8bps; 30Y: +0.3bps)

- UST yields curve mildly steepened as front end UST yields dip with energy price appearing less threatening to policy stance.

- The moderate front end yield movements compared to previous weeks may persist. Markets are now pricing in less than 150bps of cuts by Dec 2025 which represent an alignment with the Fed Dot Plot, major shifts may hinge on elections risks and geo-politics as economic data this week may not pivotal.

Equities (Nasdaq: +0.6%; S&P: +0.4%; Dow: +0.1%)

- US equities ended last week on a buoyant note led by the Nasdaq as Apple rose on news of robust Iphone sales in China and Netflix beat expectations on revenue and subscriber numbers.

FX (DXY: -0.3%)

- The Greenback weakened against most G10 peers, largely giving up gains from Thursday. Reflecting so, EUR recovered to above mid-1.08.

- USD/JPY dropped to below mid-149 from above 150 as BoJ officials were reported to be in little rush to hike in October even though they look to move later.

- AUD bulls remain cautious, hovering above 67 cents and look tentative about further rallies.

- The CAD is a notable exception, unable to gain as the Bank of Canada look set to embark on a large cut this coming Wednesday.

China: Kick Off

- Last Friday, the PBoC launched their specialised re-lending facility (offering 300bn RMB) to help listed companies buy back shares and also a swap facility to allow institutional investors to obtain liquidity to purchase stocks. The latter has received 200bn RMB of applications.

- In turn, the CSI 300 surged 3.6%. That said, given the depth of the economic slowdown as reflected by Q3 GDP growth posting at 4.6% slower than Q2's 4.7%, this merely reflects the start of the transmission of the announced measures to tackle the confidence issues. Specifically, rising equity asset prices need to dampen the negative wealth effects from property prices as property measure attempt to stem the decline (New and Used Homes Prices dropped 0.7% and 0.9% MoM in September respectively).

- For other monetary policy measures, last Friday, PBoC Governor Pan Gongsheng proposed another reduction in the RRR by 25 to 50bp and a policy rate cut by 20bp "at an appropriate time in Q4" at an annual finance forum.

The VND's Warning

- The VND ended up the underperformer last week on SBV officials being open to rate cuts, underscoring that following the Fed is far from easy.

- Admittedly, macroeconomic performance thus far has been stellar, that said, their low FX reserve coverage ratio imply vulnerabilities in episode of USD strength due to the smaller buffers of 'hard' currency.

- Furthermore, unlike regional peers, the potential to follow the Fed is barely existent given that the SBV is just 50bps above their Covid low pandemic induced policy rates.

- Looking ahead, we expect that the market induced warning will restrain the SBV from embarking on policy rate easing.
